2010 REVIEW ARTICLE INCENTIVE PROGRAM

The American Society for Dermatologic Surgery seeks to increase the number of review articles published in Dermatologic Surgery on topics of broad scientific interest, or highly-focused clinical topics related to therapy, diagnosis or other aspects of dermatologic surgery practice. As an incentive, the top three submissions will receive complimentary ASDS registration and two nights accommodations attend the 2010 ASDS/ASCDAS Joint Annual Meeting in Chicago, IL this October.

ELIGIBILITY

Any dermatologic surgeon in training or practice may submit a review article and be considered for this program. Manuscripts will not be considered unless they follow the Instructions for Authors (available at the Journal Web site <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/ds>) and are accompanied by an official Review Article Incentive Program Application. Please note the submission guidelines below.

SUBMISSIONS

A review article is a critical evaluation of material that has already been published. It should define and clarify the material; summarize previous investigations in order to inform the reader of the state of current research; compare and contrast differing methodologies; identify relations, contradictions, gaps and inconsistencies in the literature, and suggest the next step or steps in continuing research or solving the problem. The review should include a description of how the key articles were selected for inclusion, and evaluative statements about the strengths and weaknesses of the material.

- Review articles must be concise and critical, and generally consist of 4,000 to 5,000 words.
- Review articles contain a comprehensive list of references, usually between 50 and 100 citations.
- The use of tables and figures to summarize critical points is encouraged.

Review articles are reviewed by the editors and other expert reviewers before a final publication decision is made. Revisions may be required and must be received within the allotted time frame.
